Invisible space character pastebin

Space characters indicate the space between all the characters you can actually see. They have width (height if you write vertically), some special rules, and not much else. The most common space character is the space of words you get when you press the Spacebar. In general, the white space is any empty area of a drawing or composition, the margins in a book, or the sky in a table: It's as simple as this, but it's often white space that separates good design from bad—almost always because there isn't enough of it. The big guy, even the huge guy, can be handsome and useful. But balance is usually much more important than size - and balance consists mainly of emptiness. Typographically, the balance is made of empty space. Robert Bringhurst - The elements of the typographical style The above applies especially online. Web developers tend to put as much information as possible on your screen. A common criticism of this website is that there is too much wasted space. That's a mistake. The opposite is true. The fuller the composition, the less weight is carried by each individual element. When designing a Web site or document, you can use spaces to distinguish important information. Online (especially on social media) you often limit to the blank space characters defined by Unicode. While most of these characters do little, but add some white space in very specific situations, it's worth getting to know them a little bit. Using them effectively can also help your writing seem more valid. Space is the character you receive when you press the Spacebar. He's the most common character in space. The word space is a character with an inherent conflict of interest: the space must be wide enough to separate individual words, but narrow enough to encourage grouping into sentences and paragraphs. Karen Cheng - Press Design The word space is used to separate words and sentences. You already know that, but there are still a few pitfalls to know when using it. Do not use two spaces between sentences. Sometimes people add two spaces after a period. There is a logic behind this-like elements of your writing becoming larger, so does the white space between them. letters → words → sentences → paragraphs However, a period is mostly white space. Thus, sentences already have more space between them than words. The type designer of your selected font family will have taken this into account. Don't do that. Do this. See? The word space also updates the program text or web browser when it is not right to snap to another line, but this is not always what you want. If it is important for the flow of your writing that two words are never apart, you should enter a space without interruption. You can separate two words, as usual, without being able to be in separate lines. MacOS / Windows ctr-shift-space HTML Entity `&nbsp;`; Unicode U+00A0 Use the hair space when two characters are a little closer than you would like. Unliterationation the fly You can use the hair space to add kerning (space between two individual letters) in cases where you can't, such as on social media. For example, the double-hit characters created by Fancy Font Generator? May have terrible kerning. Using a hair space you can fix it. So kerning becomes kerning. HTML `&#8202;`; Unicode U+200A These two are pretty much the same. Just like the hair space used to create a little extra space between the characters. Both are about one-sixth of an Em in width. A specific use of thin space is to create quotation marks in nested values: Clive told me Prof. Reginald said do not use nested quotation marks Thin Space HTML Entity `&thinsp;`; Unicode U+2009 Six-per-em Space HTML Entity `&#8198;`; Unicode U+2006 Punctuation takes up as wide as a period. It also acts as a non-breaking space. Some languages have spaces before a punctuation mark. This space is used under these conditions. HTML `&#puncsp;` entity; Unicode U+2008 A shape space is used exclusively for the distance of fixed-width numbers. Its width is the same as one of the numbers. The ideographic space, similar to the shape space, is used with fixed-width CJK characters (Chinese Japanese Korean). Create HTML Space Entity `&#numsp;`; Unicode U+2007 Ideographic Space HTML Entity `&#12288;`; Unicode U+3000 Space 3 per em and spaces four per em are one third and a quarter of the width of an em. Entity HTML spaces 3 per em `&#emsp13;`; Unicode U+2004 HTML Entity space four per em `&#emsp14;`; Unicode U+2005 The Em space is the width of an M chapter, which also happens to be the height of most fonts. The En space is half the width of an Em. Em Space HTML Entity `&#emsp;`; Unicode U+2003 En Space HTML Entity `&#ensp;`; Unicode U+2002 This is my favorite—not really a space. It's meant to represent a Braille pattern with six un-elevated dots. Thus, it appears as blank or sometimes six hollow dots. - This means that you can use this space where you normally can't, as in URLs. HTML `&#10240;`; Unicode U+2800 The oddly named zero-width space has a strange task to do. Allows your browser to know when it's ok to break a word into a new line without hyphenation. Useful, perhaps, but the ability to use an invisible character without width has serious implications for cybersecurity. Hackers could create usernames, email addresses, and websites that look like with a man, but different from computers. Fortunately, zero-width spaces are prohibited in e-mail addresses or domain names, and it is a known issue. It's unlikely you'll be deceived that way, but it's happened. On the other hand, there are some really useful things you can do with a zero-width space: Stop the automatic connection You can stop social media sites from automatically converting a URL to a link without breaking the link text. Empty form inputs You can use all of these spaces to fill the entrances with empty space, but the zero-width space seems to work in some places the others Prevent information leaks This idea comes from the Zach Aysan cybersecurity type If your organization is leaking, you can add zero-width spaces to sensitive documents—hidden in different places for each of the recipients. Once the material is leaked, you can check it for zero-width spaces and find out the identity of the burglar. Send secret messages You can use zero-width spaces to hide an encoded binary message in a piece of text. For example: `l h e r e i s a h i d e n e m o j i i n t h i s` HTML `#8203?` Unicode U+200B While most of these tricks are useful only for web developers-I can imagine a few scenarios where these characters could help you stand out on social media.
